By making nominations for commissioners in the primaries in Jupe; then by the re-districting of the county into new commissioner districts in July, and a further petition nomination for commissloner to fill out a new district, the county now has six commissioners either holding over or elected at the November election when they are entitled only to five under the law. The re-districting left one of the primary numbers residing in the same district with a hold-over member, and some one will have to drop out or be dropped out board of five, if all those elected insist upon their rights as commissioners.
